

Discounted Home Internet Service Offerings: COVID-19

In response to the Coronavirus pandemic, several internet and telecom service providers have pledged to offer free access to the internet or increased data allowances to ensure people can get online during this unprecedented time. The table below highlights some of the latest offerings.

Please note: This document is our best interpretation of each company's offerings, which are subject to change. Contact the Internet Service Providers directly for details.

Summary

You have a few options for free or discounted internet access:

1. Comcast, Cox, and Altice are offering free internet service with no contract, for qualified customers.
2. Personal Mobile Device as wifi hotspot:
 - If you have a mobile phone and a data plan, your provider may have expanded your ability to use your mobile phone as a “hotspot.” Verify with your mobile provider what is available; a number of major carriers have increased the data allowed for mobile hotspots.
 - How it works: To turn your mobile phone into a hotspot, you change a setting in your cellular settings that enables hotspot, and you will see wifi name and login information on your phone. Then choose the wifi name in your computer’s wifi list, and type in the password you see on your phone. Contact your mobile carrier or view your carrier’s website for details on how to setup a mobile hotspot.
3. Free public wifi hotspots available in some residential areas from AT&T, Comcast, and Charter (and, perhaps, others).
 - How it works: In the wifi settings on your device, you will be able to see available public wifi. For example, for Comcast it says “xfinitywifi”. You will now be able to connect to that without any limits on time. Each person using Comcast for their internet has a router that acts as an access point or hotspot for public wifi. This gives other people access to the Xfinity wifi if they are near, but they are not using the customer’s wifi; it is Xfinity operated.

We will do our best to update this document with offers from other companies.
