October Spotlight:

Fall Training on the Power of Play with Ashley McGuire and Thom Nezbeda:

Ashley McGuire is one half of A Better Center, an organization dedicated to helping people find more peace, balance, and joy in all the spaces where they live, work, and learn. Thom Nezbeda is one half of A Better Center, a partnership focused on helping bring people together—better—in all aspects of their lives. He is also the founder and CEO of Ready Actual, a performance improvement consultancy.

Play is something that comes to us easily as children and seems to disappear far too fast. We stop playing to focus on more serious pursuits, forgetting how crucial play is for our self development. It’s through play that we learn to navigate relationships, experience disappointments and build resilience, and refine our communication skills. Given how effective play is at teaching key life skills, doesn’t it make sense to keep the fun going?

Join two expert game creators and leaders, as they lead you through a variety of new and innovative activities, and share powerful facilitation skills to support you building a connected, joyful, and community-centered classroom. This fast-paced and fun session gives you great tools to help your students build trust, strengthen critical thinking, express themselves more effectively, and connect the community. Learn how to integrate play into your every day, and help your team come together!

"Generating buy-in and school-wide RJ practices can take years. In the meantime, schools have individuals and small groups who see the value right away and want to implement as much as they can within their sphere of control and influence. In this workshop, we'll focus on practical strategies and talking points that can be used to deepen and enhance your practice now as you champion RJ within your school community. We'll focus on interventions that can happen on the interpersonal and classroom/team/club-wide levels that strengthen our Tier 1 practices to help us prevent harm and escalation."
